

First O'ahu Royal Genealogy

Lineage from the Lō-ali'i and King Kahahana of O'ahu

86 Generations

In ancient times, the O'ahu chiefs from Lihue, Wahiawa and Halemano were called Lō-ali'i (Generation 64). Kamakau identifies Lō-ali'i as high-ranking chiefs, who belonged to places in central O'ahu (Tales of People of Old). According to Kepelino, the Lō-ali'i were "called lō, because they kept up their kapu as chiefs even though they did not live with the ruling chiefs of the island but dwelt apart in the mountains". The term "lō," according to Kamakau, is from "loa'a," "to obtain"; these chiefs guarded their kapu by living apart and thus from their ranks, "a 'guaranteed' chief might be obtained. They were like gods, unseen, resembling men." (Tales of People of Old). Hawaiian scholar Mary Pukui says they were, "chiefs of Pōkano", chiefs of unblemished bloodline from remote times.

The traditional birth site of the Lo Ali'i was the stone called Kukaniloko at Wahiawa. Ali'i born at Kukaniloko were deemed fitting rulers to govern their people. The first to be born at Kukaniloko was Kapawa. In our Kekoolani genealogies, this son is called Heleipawa. It was his parents who began the tradition followed by many of Oahu's highest-ranking kapu chiefs.

In Thrum's 1897 Hawaiian Annual, Emma M. Nakuina called Kukaniloko, "the ancient birthplace of the O'ahu kings and rulers" and the headquarters of the "high priest of the island": "Every woman of royal blood had to retire to this place when about to give birth to a child, on pain of forfeiting the rank, privileges, and prerogatives of her expected offspring, should the child be born in a less sacred place." A requirement thought necessary in order to give birth at Kukaniloko was the family's avoidance of human sacrifice and an unblemished genealogy. It is thought that King Kamehameha's wife Keopuolani was unsuccessful in reaching Kukaniloko to give birth because he practiced human sacrifice.

All of the last ruling chiefs of the O'ahu Kingdom were descendants of the Lō chief of Lihue named Lō Lale (Generation 67). He intertwined the chiefly lineages of O'ahu's remote past with that of Maui's when he married the famous chiefess Keleanuino'ana'api'api, sister of Kawaokaohela, the King of Maui. Many ancestral chiefs of O'ahu are descended from the three sons of Lō Lale and his Maui wife Keleanuino'ana'api'api, the Lō chiefs Kaholi-a-Lale, Luli-wahine, and Luli-kane.

Of particular importance was their first son, Lō Kaholi-a-Lale who married Kohe-palaoa, daughter of Piilawe, ruling chief of Ewa. This marriage united her wohi rank with his sacred lō rank in their son Kanehoalani, who became chief of Koolau, O'ahu. Several generations later was born Kualii, the great warrior king of O'ahu, from whom the Kekoolani line descends directly via his son King Peleioholani and Kualii's daughter Kaionuilanilahai (Ka-'io-nui-lala-ha'i). She is the mother of Kahahana, last independent king of O'ahu, who was killed when Maui took control of the island. The Kekoolani family are the descendants of the two children of Kahahana who survived, a boy and girl, Piilua and Kaheleaka'ulani, who married each other (ninau pio) and carried on his royal O'ahu bloodline and his legacy of Lō Ali'i chiefly lineage.

Because this is the first of the O'ahu genealogies chanted by the Kekoolani family, it is lengthy: its completeness and comprehensiveness requires the telling be in three parts. First, the Kumulii Genealogy, a traditional creation chant and royal genealogy belonging to O'ahu found in the famous Chant of Kualii (King of O'ahu), which gives 26 generations of ancestors for Wakea, considered the progenitor of the Hawaiian people. Second, the Opuukahonua Genealogy, another O'ahu genealogy incorporated in the Chant of Kualii, gives the 14 generations leading up to Papanuihanaumoku (also called Papa or Haumea), the traditional mother of the Hawaiian people. Finally we give the remaining O'ahu royal genealogy from the Nanaulu and Maweke traditions as taught by our kupuna the ali'i Solomon L.K. Peleioholani and understood by those who know the chiefly genealogies. This covers the generations from Wakea and Papa to modern times and the living Kekoolani family.

In the following mo'o kū'auhau, the first two parts for Wakea and Papa do not agree with each other. Among other things, the genealogies give different sets of parents for the chief Kahiko. In 1903, our great-grandfather Solomon Peleioholani wrote about the problem of inconsistencies in the genealogies of Wakea and Papa descending from The Beginning (he called it "Chaos" or "Pō"). In his great genealogical masterwork The Genealogy of the Robinson Family, he explained that it is common for genealogies from the remote past before Wakea and Papa to disagree. He said that is why most modern Hawaiian royal genealogies, beginning with those by David Malo, use Wakea and Papa as a starting point. From there on, disagreements between traditions are less frequent and less pronounced. The Kekoolani family enumerates the generations before Wakea and Papa only in the first genealogy in a group from a particular island. Thereafter, the other genealogies from that island start with Wakea and Papa. Generations in this genealogy are calculated at 25 years each.
